The last day of our work week was like the other 3, busy throughout most of the day. Officers started the day with a violation of a court order. A parent had a restraining order against their adult child. The child (in his 20's) was recently released from jail and was found by the protected party in their back yard. Officers arrived and took him into custody without incident. Officers also investigated a possible elder abuse (mental suffering). An elderly female found items in her adult son's property that made her fear for her safety. A judge was called and an EPO was granted against the son. He was served, and she was given direction on how to obtain a temporary protective order. Adult Protective Services was also called about the incident.
